Jinggangshan

It is located in the southwest of Jiangxi Province, in the middle section of the Luoxiao Mountains at the junction of Hunan and Jiangxi provinces. In ancient times, it was known as "the place where Chenzhou, Hengzhou, Hunan and Jiangxi meet, and in the heart of the thousand-mile Luoxiao Mountains". In the early days of the Agrarian Revolutionary War, the Communist Party of China carried out the strategy of workers' and peasants' armed separatism in the Jinggangshan area at the border between Hunan and Jiangxi provinces and established the first rural revolutionary base of the Communist Party of China - the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Base.

The Revolutionary Site Group of the Octagonal Tower in Maoping

The site group includes the former residence of Mao Zedong in the Octagonal Tower, the site of the First Congress of the Communist Party of China at the Hunan-Jiangxi border, the former site of the Soldiers' Committee of the Fourth Red Army, the former residence of Comrade Chen Yi, the former site of the Front Committee of the Communist Party of China in Jinggangshan and the Special Committee of the Hunan-Jiangxi border (Red Army Hospital), the former site of the Biyunshan Training Ground, the site of the Second Congress of the Communist Party of China at the Hunan-Jiangxi border and other former sites. It used to be the location of the Party, government and military leading organs of the Jinggangshan revolutionary base and the command center of the armed separatist struggle of workers and peasants at the Hunan-Jiangxi border

Jinggangshan Revolutionary Museum

The Jinggangshan Revolutionary Museum was established to commemorate the first rural revolutionary base established by the Communist Party of China - the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Base. It is the first local revolutionary history museum in China and one of the first batch of 83 national first-class museums. The old building of the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Museum was approved for construction by the National Cultural Relics Bureau in 1958 and opened to the public in October 1959. On September 29, 2005, the new building of the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Museum started construction. On November 5, 2007, the museum took the lead in opening to the public for free in Jiangxi Province. The main building has four floors. The first floor is a parking lot and a lecture hall. The second floor is for cultural relic storage and office space. The third and fourth floors are exhibition halls, displaying more than 800 cultural relics and more than 2,000 photos in total. The new museum is divided into six parts: the prelude hall, the establishment of the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Base, the development of the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Base, the restoration of the Jinggangshan Revolutionary Base, the persistence of the struggle in Jinggangshan, and the promotion of the Jinggangshan spirit. By making full use of high-tech means, it comprehensively and systematically displays the historical struggles in Jinggangshan.
